Who would have thought that the first extraterrestrial message received on Earth would arrive in the form of a book? And who would have imagined, before opening the book in search for answers, that it would contain nothing but questions?

This alienly illustrated and designed atlas of philosophical questions is structured around fourteen thematic maps that invite us to explore our humanity through aspects such as identity, gender, knowledge, human relationships and relationships with other earthlings, the environment, the chain of command and the distribution of wealth on our planet, mathematics, language, art and the meaning of life.

What is it like to be human? And what is it like to be you? What is gender for? How do you know what you know? Does planet Earth make a good home? How do you human beings get along? Who names the world on planet Earth? And is 2+2 always 4 on Earth?
